Mobile phones are firmly rooted in the life of mankind. Today, the mobile phone serves us not only as a means of making calls. Therefore, it is of great interest in terms of pedagogical use, its impact on every aspect of the learning process, including language learning. Mobile phones are actively used in the educational process today. Among the advantages: popularity, that is, all foreign students have phones with standard functionality, you can download textbooks, various video materials, audio files, it is enough to have only internal memory, even for small costs; mobility, i.e. insignificant weight and size facilitate transportation.

In Ukrainian as a foreign language classes, modern mobile phones are indispensable gadgets. It is enough to download educational materials, textbooks, manuals. You can use a voice recorder to develop listening skills or learn new vocabulary. Yes, the teacher dictates fragments of the text. Students must listen and answer the teacher's questions or try to reproduce what they heard. Also, with the help of the "Dictaphone" application, you can control the formation of speaking and reading skills, when the student talks about a topic chosen in advance or, when reading a text, writes it down, and the teacher checks the pronunciation of words, intonation. The skill of writing with the help of a mobile phone can be formed only in the part of grammar tests in which students are asked to choose one of the proposed answers.

Thus, today mobile phones should be considered as multitasking gadgets that are popular among students from the point of view of versatility, and among teachers from the point of view of application in pedagogical practice.
